

Google's homepage is organized into main containers and sub containers to create a clear and efficient layout. The navigation container at the top includes links like Gmail, Images, and Sign In, giving users easy access to other services. The main content container holds the Google logo, search bar, buttons, and language options, which are the primary interactive elements. The footer container at the bottom contains country information and links to important pages like Privacy, Terms, and About.

Inside these main containers, sub containers further organize content. The links sub-container groups quick-access options, while the content sub-container holds the search interface and language settings. Major sections like search options, footer links, and country information help categorize key features, while sub-sections break down the layout into smaller, manageable components.